Peg A. David selected as CNET Civilian of the Year

PENSACOLA, Fla.- Ms. Peg A. David has been selected as the Chief of Naval Education and Training “Civilian of the Year” for 1998, in recognition of her performance in the Education and Training Strategies (ETS) Division on the CNET staff.

As a program analyst trainee, Ms. David was a member of the Program Objectives Memorandum (POM) Integrated Process Team (IPT). She coordinated the team effort to ensure the objectives of the group were met. David’s efforts contributed to producing the Training Baseline Assessment, which provides a roadmap for technology implementations across Naval Education and Training Commands. An important aspect of the plan is a database, that links a navy baseline database, that will be instrumental in tracking the success of investment strategies.

David’s exceptional organizational skills have made her a key person in many successful department projects. She continually seeks ways to employ innovative ideas to make her division and CNET headquarters more effective. She is always willing to share her technical knowledge and encourages others to design and share ideas as well. She also encourages peers and coworkers to be an instrument for change and to set goals to implement those changes.
